$40,000 Granted To Core Program

When Saint Joseph's College initiated its unique Core general education curriculum in the fall of 1969, many professional educators around the nation turned interested eyes and ears toward Rensselaer while making mental notes that they'd want to see how this bold, innovative approach to higher education would work out.

Core is now moving through its tenth academic year at Saint Joseph's and educators from coast to coast have their answer: Core is working, even more successfully than some optimistic observers had predicted ten years ago.

And there is one more development: Core has gained a national reputation among educators as a model interdisciplinary approach to general education requirements. In recent years, large and small schools tution, a Catholic liberal arts college, than the more traditional approach to general education," says Dr. Earl J. McGrath in his book, General Education and the Plight of Modern Man.

According to Core coordinator Dr. John Nichols, "Harvard received national acclaim when it decided to reconstruct its general education program, but according to articles I have seen, the consensus is that the program here maintains and displays a more ambitious and innovative approach to education than Harvard."

Articles concerning Saint Joseph's Core program have been published in many books and magazines. Forum magazine regarded Core to be of such great importance that it ran an introduction of the Core programs of various colleges and universities and included Saint Joseph's program in the first issue, with a display on the front cover.

Other schools featured in that issue were Stanford University, the University of Kentucky, Kenyon (Ohio) College and the University of Wisconsin - Green Bay.

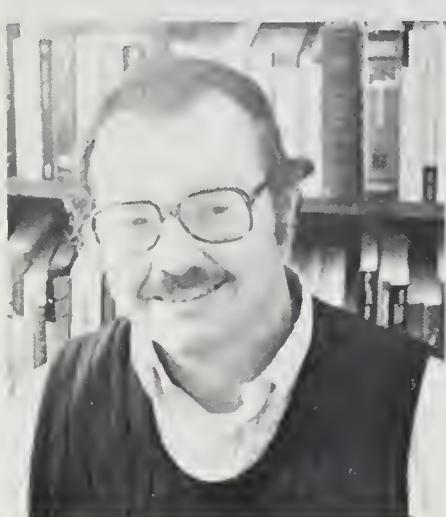

Since the publication of this article, Saint Joseph's has received more than 150 letters from schools asking about Core and how they might go about starting a similar program.

general education curriculum in action.

"Because of honors like these, Saint Joseph's students and especially the upperclassmen, should feel a sense of pride in their Core program, since these students have played a strong supportive role in helping to structure our program," says Dr. Nichols. "Saint Joseph's has a legitimate claim that Core has earned a national reputation in the college teaching profession."

DR. NICHOLS

alike have studied Saint Joseph's Core curriculum with a viewpoint toward adopting a similar program themselves.

"Saint Joseph's College adopted its Core curriculum because it was seen to be a better way to achieve the goals and purposes of the insti-

Dr. Burkey Coordinates 25 Students In Creative Free Enterprise Program

Innovative approaches to learning are nothing new at Saint Joseph's College, and when the second semester of the current school year began, approximately 25 students embarked on what one professor terms "A healthy challenge, an exciting learning experience."

Dr. Roy Burkey, chairman of Saint Joseph's department of business administration, is campus sponsor of "Students in Free Enterprise," a project of the National Leadership Institute, which is a non-profit educational organization in cooperation with American colleges and universities and the American business community.

Headquartered in Dallas, Tex., the purpose of the project is to encourage and help young people anticipating business careers to commit themselves to a movement of their own creation.

Students are to design projects "that speak up for our American free enterprise system which, even with its imperfections, has brought us to the highest standard of living history has known, and projects that help preserve for themselves the a session last October in Kalamazoo, Mich., where the purposes and goals of the institute were explained.

"There is a special emphasis on creativity, on student initiative, and on students selling themselves on what they are doing," Dr. Burkey points out. "Using leadership skills, students are motivated to create their own imaginative, effective programs on campus and in surrounding communities to show the superiority of free enterprise over other economic systems."

Creation of puppet shows, skits and radio shows are included among ideas in the past three years of this program. Other students have written articles for newspapers or designed classroom presentations as supplements to regular class material. In one city, students did paintings on the theme "what free enterprise means to me," displayed them in store windows, and stood by to explain the paintings to observers.

State competition for Indiana and Michigan will be held next April at Lansing, Mich., with a $1,000 prize going to the school judged the best. In May, national competition will be held in Dallas with the top prize being $10,000.

"It's important that students remember that the winning of prizes is actually secondary to the tremendous experience in leadership to be gained from this competition," Dr. Burkey says. "This is the first year Indiana is represented in the competition; Anderson and Indiana-Richmond also are participating."

Saint Joe students first heard of the National Leadership Institute program via the campus Business Club, and Dr. Burkey states their enthusiasm for the project matches his.

"Achievements of students in the past three years under this program are solid testimony to the commitment and leadership that participating students and faculty sponsors have brought to this challenging opportunity," Dr. Burkey concludes.

Mehall Announces Addition To Medical Technology Program

Saint Joseph's medical technology program has become affiliated with Good Samaritan Hospital of Vincennes, Ind., announces Dr. Andrew G. Mehall, chairman of the college department of biology.

"Opportunities for internships in southern Indiana are now available to our students enrolled in the medical technology program at Saint Joseph's," Dr. Mehall explains. "Since we are enrolling students from southern Indiana, it is to the advantage

Evansville and Terre Haute, is allowed to enroll 12 medical technology interns in the training program but routinely accepts six to eight each year, thus maximizing individualized instruction.

"Because it is both a general and specialized hospital, student interns at Good Samaritan have the opportunity to be exposed to a wide variety of laboratory techniques," Dr. Mehall points out.

To initiate the affiliation, Good Samaritan Hospital has accepted one of Saint Joseph's junior applicants, Teresa Edward of Leesburg, Ind.

Saint Joseph's medical technology program is now affiliated with five hospitals: Good Samaritan; St. Mary Mercy of Gary, Ind.; St. John of Anderson, Ind.; St. Vincent of Indianapolis and St. Joseph of Chicago.

Dr. Burkey says this program will bring up to three hours of credit via independent study to students during the winter semester.

Funding, Public Relations Top Priorities For SJC

Most successful ventures need a carefully-considered list of priorities, and Dr. Robert J. Garrity, vice-president for academic affairs at Saint Joseph's College, underscores funding and public relations as top priorities for higher education today.

"Where will today's high school graduates get the money necessary to attend college? This question presents a major roadblock to many students who would like to enroll," Dr. Garrity points out, "and the future of higher education hinges upon how well we can derive meaningful answers to this question."

As for public relations, Dr. Garrity feels there is an immediate need to convince the public that a college education is much more than preparation for a career.

"Widespread respect for higher education as more than a vocational school is needed and we need to address ourselves more to the reality of what an education really means," he stresses.

The state of Ohio provides one of the most hopeful signs regarding effective funding for students seeking avenues into colleges and universities.

"Ohio's legislature recently approved an outlay of $1 million in the form of $1,000 scholarships offered to top Ohio high school graduates who wish to attend an Ohio college or university," Dr. Garrity says. "So far as I know, this is the first program of its kind, and I would like to see this done by more states."

He notes that it is important that a student have a freedom of choice between private and public schools when he considers institutions of higher learning.

"What's really unfortunate is that many students who really prefer to go to a private school cannot because of financial consideration," Dr. Garrity continues. "What's needed is that educators and professional organizations keep on seeking avenues to guarantee students a true freedom of choice; private schools also must protect their interests by strong public relations at state and federal levels."

To increase public confidence in the value of higher education, Dr. Garrity says private schools "must look to themselves first in showing the public that an education helps a person to know better the world he lives in.

"The best messengers a school can have are its students and alumni, who, by their day-to-day lives, show others what an education has done for them. Each graduate is a reflection of his or her alma mater."

Saint Joe Students Surprise Father Banet With Huge Birthday Cake, Celebration

More than 500 Saint Joseph's College students visited the Halleck Center cafeteria Wednesday, Dec. 6 for a surprise birthday party honoring college president Father Charles Banet.

Father Banet, who has been president of Saint Joseph's since June of 1965, celebrated his 56th birthday in December.

Central to the celebration was a 10-foot by three foot sheet cake, chocolate with white icing. The "Happy Birthday, Father Banet, from the Student Association," is what Mark Behnke (jr. SA President) is saying at a recent birthday party held for the SJC president.

ALUMNI PRESIDENT'S REPORT

Dear Alumni and Alumnae,

Today the smallest college and the largest university share a very serious problem. Reduced enrollments, either in terms of fewer students or fewer registered credit hours, are being reported throughout the nation. Many causes are cited for this threatening phenomenon such as rising costs of education, inflation in general, and a shifting of emphasis away from the traditional, four-year college degree.

Recently, I was invited to attend a "College Night" at one of the local high schools. I envisioned finding a group of 25 or 30 recruiters. Instead, I found well over 80 colleges represented, several from distances of 300 miles or more. This brought into sharp focus the immense competition which exists in the college recruiting area.

Your Alumni Association has always stood ready to help the College in any way it can. In September it became clear that Saint Joseph's College was experiencing enrollment difficulties; the Alumni Association quickly offered its services to the College. Plans were drafted to create and fill a position in the Admissions Office of alumni liaison for recruiting purposes. This position is expected to be filled soon. It is expected that this liaison person will work closely with the Alumni Association in developing programs and approaches to tap the rich resource of alumni assistance for student recruiting purposes.

In the near future you will be hearing more about how you can help. We envision conducting meetings at various Alumni Chapter locations to give interested alumni thorough orientation on the College, its programs, tuition costs and other matters which can be helpful in talking to high school students about Saint Joe's.

You certainly don't have to wait for us, however. If you know a high school junior or senior who might be a good prospect for Saint Joe's, please make contact with the College so that the Admissions Office can give its full attention to that student's need for information. In addition, if you are interested in having an Alumni Recruiting meeting in your city, please write Jerry Lasko at the College. As always, your college needs you.

Sincerely,

Dale W. Fallat

Dale W. Fallat

marathon since September of 1977.

According to Bert Valenkamph (sr.-Gal.), chairman of the marathon, "participation and contributions from the student body and the Rensselaer community far exceeded our hopes and expectations."

Gallagher's goal was set at $2,000, while the goal of a similar marathon conducted in December of 1977 was $1,000.

"A lot of credit can be given to the food service that matched us with $1.35 for each student who gave up his or her dinner during the marathon. The response was tremendous—over 500 students relinquished their dinners, amounting to $819 donated to the marathon," says Valenkamph.

With the money collected, Christmas food baskets were prepared for needy families in the local community. In addition, marathon funds supported a Dec. 17 Christmas party for needy area children.

Many students who were involved with the party said it captured the real meaning of the holiday season.

Most students participating in the marathon played in one-hour shifts from 5:30 p.m. Dec. 14 to 3:30 p.m. Dec. 15. During the last hour of the marathon, television station WLFI of Lafayette aired a brief portion of the floor hockey action.

Other marathon committee members were: Tom Krodell (sr.-Gal.), Jim Pronteau (sr.-Gal.) and Al Borck (jr.-Gal.).

"As residents of Gallagher Hall and the Saint Joe community, we hope next year more students will get involved, and the continued success and support already evident in the past will keep increasing along with our fund-raising goals," says Valenkamph.

"Everyone gains from a project like this," he concludes. "Those who give and those who receive are both richer in spirit and in person from such an experience."

Six Pumas Selected For All-Conference

ROARKS

GEDNEY

Four senior Puma defensive players won first-team berths on the All-Heartland Collegiate Conference football team for 1978. All-American middle guard candidates Charles Roarks, tackle Ken Soldat, linebacker Mark Greiner, and free safety John Zaworski were chosen on the all-conference defensive team. Zaworski was a first-team repeater from last year, while for Roarks this marks his third consecutive year as not only a first-team selection, but the third consecutive year he has been named the most valuable defensive lineman in the conference, which is a first in the conference.

In addition, two other senior

Pumas were chosen to the second-team offensive all-conference team: split end Doug Knutson, and tackle Steve Gedney, who was also a repeat all-conference performer from last year.

Cagers On Way To Winning Season

Dave Downey slam-dunks the ball against DePauw Jan. 27. The Pumas lost the game, 78-79.
